Imagic Productions began in 1997 and, since then, has been providing media production services to the non-governmental organizations (NGO), government, and international humanitarian agencies whose voices are sometimes left unheard because of their inability to access channels of media. It was a dream transformed into reality by its founder, Judy Rosario Diño, whose years of experience as a writer and director gave her the inspiration to venture out and explore the vast world of development through what she now calls development arts. Her primary medium of bringing the message across is through videos.

To date, this full-service production and post-production company has been serving the needs of different sectors – from small fisherfolk, persons with disability and urban poor organizations to the country’s migration agencies, social welfare, health and labor departments, from children’s organizations to various people’s organizations. The objective of Imagic Productions is clear: service to the development sector through advocative videos.
